Resource Center Dallas comments on agreement to provide training for the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission

Dallas – The following statement is from Mike McKay, executive director and Cece Cox, J.D., associate director for GLBT community services at Resource Center Dallas:

“Resource Center Dallas is honored to partner with the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission (TABC) to provide diversity training to all its employees across the state,” said McKay. “Our diversity education team, led by Cece Cox, is uniquely qualified to provide this training, bringing more than 25 years of activism, legal expertise and strategic communications skills to the table.”

“This training is designed to assist TABC in its day-to-day dealings with members of the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender (GLBT) communities not only in the workplace, but also in professional interactions with the public,” Cox added.

“Our training, whether it’s offered to a public agency, a corporation or in an educational setting, strives to be comprehensive and will include material about an inclusive workplace, language, and a brief cultural overview of the GLBT community. The training fits in with the Center’s mission to serve the GLBT community to provide education and builds upon our expertise in workforce diversity training. It will allow TABC to do its job better as it relates to the GLBT community statewide.

We are honored that TABC has turned to Resource Center Dallas to seek positive change through education and training, and look forward to building a beneficial partnership not only for those attending the training but also for the GLBT communities across Texas.”
